

Volunteers Rid Solstice of Non-Native Plants

RESTORATION—Last Saturday, volunteers converged in Solstice Canyon to remove weeds so that wildflowers and native plants can flourish in this national park. Pictured clockwise from left: With pick in hand, Adi Sayas and Justine Hallberg make short work of unwelcome plants; father and son team Jim and Tim Spratt dig away fire-prone dried foliage; and Sid Mendel, who is a volunteer with the California Native Plant Society, one of the sponsors, along with the National Park Service and Tree People, of the event.
